

digital system is made up of several parts. The "control" unit, including the answering machine, is the "brain" of the system. It is the "brain" that tells the system when to answer the phone and when to play the recorded message. The "voice" unit, which is the "mouth" of the system, is the part that actually speaks the recorded message. The "display" unit, which is the "eyes" of the system, is the part that shows the caller the time of day and the date. The "memory" unit, which is the "heart" of the system, is the part that stores the recorded message. The "power" unit, which is the "lungs" of the system, is the part that provides the system with the power it needs to operate.
