studies to offer new ways of looking at the author reader channel drawing on work from Roger Sell Jean Jacques Lecercle and James Phelan The volume traces the evolution of its form across historical periods genres and media from its origins in the conversational mode of direct address in 18th century English novels to the use of second person narratives in the 20th century through to 21st century digital fiction with its implicit requirement for reader participation The book engages in questions of how the author reader channel is shaped by different forms and how this continues to evolve in emerging contemporary genres and of shifting ethics of author and reader involvement This book will be of particular interest to students and scholars interested in the intersection of pragmatics stylistics and literary studies The Past and Other
