The Romantic Literary Lecture in Britain Sarah Zimmerman, 2019-01-17 At the beginning of the nineteenth century the literary lecture arrived on London's cultural scene as an influential critical medium and popular social event It flourished for two decades in the hands of the period's most prominent lecturers Samuel Taylor Coleridge John Thelwall Thomas Campbell and William Hazlitt Lecturers aimed to shape auditors reading habits burnish their own professional profiles and establish a literary canon Auditors wielded their own considerable influence since their sustained approbation was necessary to a lecturer's success and independent series could collapse midway if attendance waned Two chapters are therefore devoted to the auditors whose creative responses to what they heard often constituted cultural works in their own right Auditors wrote poems and letters about lecture performances acted as patrons to lecturers and hosted dinners and conversation parties that followed these events Prominent auditors included John Keats Mary Russell Mitford Henry Crabb Robinson Catherine Maria Fanshawe and Lady Charlotte Bury The Romantic public literary lecture is a fascinating cultural phenomenon in its own right but understanding the medium has significant implications for some of the period's most important literary criticism such as Coleridge's readings of Shakespeare and Hazlitt's Lectures on the English Poets 1818 The book's two main aims are to chart the emergence of the literary lecture as a popular medium and to develop a critical approach to these events by drawing on an interdisciplinary discussion about how to treat historical speaking performances
