from the cruelly selfish machinations of Alyosha's father the dark and powerful Prince Valkovsky Boris Jakim's fresh English language rendering of this gem in the Dostoevsky canon is both more colorful and more accurate than any earlier translation from back cover

The Insulted and Injured Fyodor Dostoyevsky, Constance Garnett, 2014-08-20 To the extent that Dostoevsky can be imagined as approaching the commonplace he does so in what is at the same time the shortest and the least distinguished of the novels that have so far appeared in the admirable Garnett translation Here there is melodramatic plot of a kind that is absent from his earlier tales and which taken in conjunction with the gray atmosphere of the St Petersburg slum strongly suggests Dickens of the somber parts of Bleak House or Our Mutual Friend These very qualities of brevity sustained plot interest a minimum of the Dostoevsky horror and a less exasperating subtlety of character and motive analysis should make The Injured and Possessed the most suitable of all his novels for the beginner who nevertheless will find enough of the peculiar quality of the greater works to carry him forward The story has the characteristic Dostoyevsky setting of poverty and chill winter and sickness of body and soul the characteristic movement in the form of almost interminable and almost endlessly repeated conversations interrupted by poignant bits of tragic action It has the characteristic Dostoevsky hero in the person of a youth who loves two women in alternate half hours and continues doing so without subsidence or climax to the end of the book In this feature lies the very serious weakness of an undeniably great writer Dostoyevsky's enigmatic men and women frequently do not pass through a psychological evolution but simply keep on changing their minds back and forth with somewhat of the effect produced by the red and white revolving pole of the modern barber shop Such is the fickle Alyosha of the present story to whom Dostoevsky by formula opposes the constant Natasha always you find steadfastness and gentleness sacrificing itself to selfishness and psychic instability But in spite of these traits the book does come nearest to our own standards in fiction We have spoken of Dickens A scene like the death of Nellie in Dostoevsky's story is very close to the tradition of The Old Curiosity Shop The Nation Volume 101

The Insulted and the Injured (illustrated) Fyodor Dostoyevsky, 2017-08-16 The novel written by Fyodor Dostoevsky The Insulted and the Injured is one of the most melodramatic books of Russian literature It can be said that from this novel melodrama began as a literary genre The tragic inconsistency of romantic ideas about life and real life is the main idea of the novel Much of this work seemed odd to readers they faced a new ethical and social problem the problem of selfishness The writer in whose name the narrative is conducted is largely an autobiographical hero Thus the reader has the opportunity to get acquainted with the image of Dostoevsky himself Pretty illustrations provide you with new impressions from reading this legendary story
