

What are the three types of a family studies?

1. Family studies examining whether children inherit traits from biological relatives that are not shared with other relatives, such as cousins, aunts, uncles, grandparents, etc. (e.g., how tall are you and how tall are your grandparents?)

Family studies:

Studies to determine the study of genetic factors in complex traits.

How/what way family relationships are used to study traits.

How/what way of these approaches has changed over time and what is going on in the future in genetics.

1. Adoption studies: how/what way of studying genetic influences in adopted individuals and their biological relatives.

How/what way of studying genetic influences in adopted individuals (e.g., the U.S. studies adopted at birth and raised in other countries as part of the adoption process).

How/what way of studying genetic influences in twins (e.g., monozygotic vs. dizygotic twins) and in families (e.g., how/what way of studying genetic influences in families).

How/what way of studying genetic influences in twins (e.g., monozygotic vs. dizygotic twins) and in families (e.g., how/what way of studying genetic influences in families) is different from other studies (e.g., adoption studies) because the twins are raised in the same environment.
