AUTO SHUTDOWN (ASD) RELAY

The Auto Shutdown Relay (ASD) supplies battery voltage to the fuel pump, fuel injector, ignition coil, and O<sub>2</sub> sensor heating element. The ground circuit for the ASD relay is controlled by the engine controller. The engine controller operates the relay by switching the ground circuit on and off.

The engine controller monitors the distributor pick-up signal to determine engine speed and compute injector synchronization. If the controller does not receive a distributor signal when the ignition switch is in the RUN position it will de-energize (remove ground) the ASD relay. Battery voltage will not be supplied to the fuel pump, fuel injectors, ignition coil, and O<sub>2</sub> sensor heater element.

The ASD relay is located in the power distribution center. The power distribution center is mounted on the left fender wall (Fig. 22).

IGNITION COIL

The engine controller energizes the ignition coil through the auto shutdown (ASD) relay. When the relay is energized by the controller, battery voltage is supplied to the ignition coil positive terminal. The engine controller will not energize the ASD relay until it receives input from the distributor pick-up. Refer to Auto Shutdown (ASD) Relay in this section for relay operation.

Fig. 23 Ignition Coil—2.5L Engine

The ignition coil is designed to operate without an external ballast resistor. Inspect the coil for external leaks and arcing.

Test coil according to coil tester manufacturer's instructions. Test coil primary resistance. Test coil secondary resistance. Replace any coil that does not meet specifications.

If the ignition coil is replaced because of a burned tower, carbon tracking, or arcing at either the tower, nipple or boot at the coil end of the secondary cable,
