

Fig. 5 Antifreeze, penetrating oil, lithium grease, electronic cleaner and chrome spray. These products have hundreds of uses and should be a part of your ultimate tool collection.

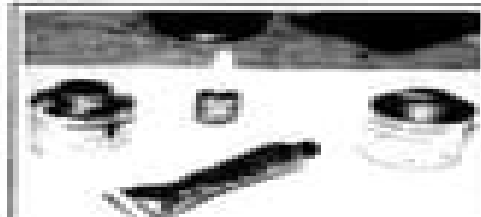

Fig. 6 Sealants are essential for preventing leaks.

Fig. 7 On some engines, RTV is used instead of gasket material to seal components.

add to each metal surface of a terminal with something that won't conduct electricity, but have it if you don't know it works. When the connection is tightened the metal-to-metal contact between the terminals will displace the grease (allowing the circuit to be completed). The grease that is displaced will then coat the non-contacted surface and the cavity around the terminals, sealing them from phosphoric moisture that could cause corrosion.

Chrome spray is a good lubricant for hard-to-reach places and parts that should not be gripped up with grease.

Penetrating oil may turn out to be one of your best friends when taking something apart that has corroded fasteners. Not only can they make a job easier, they can really help to avoid broken and stripped fasteners. The most famous penetrating oils are Liquid Wrench® and WD-40®. A great penetrating oil is Brakleen® and, while not, these products have hundreds of uses. For your purposes, they are #1's!

Before disassembling any unit (especially on an exhaust system), check the fasteners. If any appear rusted, soak them thoroughly with the penetrant and, if necessary, while you're working, use the penetrant coated on frozen parts you may need to look them a few days in advance. This simple act can save you hours of tedious work trying to extract a broken bolt or stud.

SEALANTS

• See Figures 6 and 7

Sealants are an indispensable part to certain tasks, especially if you are trying to avoid leaks. The purpose of sealants is to establish a leak-proof bond between or around assembled parts. Most sealants are used in conjunction with gaskets, but some are used instead of conventional gasket material.

The most common sealers are the non-hardening types such as Permatex® or its equivalents. These sealers are applied to the mating surfaces of each part to be joined; then a gasket is put in place and the parts are assembled.

• With sometimes overused: use for sealants like RTV is on the shelves of automotive grease suppliers.

One very helpful type of non-hardening sealer is the "high-tack" type. This type is a very sticky material that holds the gasket in place while the parts are being assembled. This stuff is really a good idea when you don't have enough hands or fingers to keep everything where it should be.

The second type sealers are the Rectorseal Temperature Resisting (RTR) silicone gasket makers. On some engines, this material is used instead of a gasket. In most instances, a gasket may not be available. Because of the shape of the mating surfaces, a gasket shouldn't be used. This stuff, when used in conjunction with a non-permanent gasket, produces the correct bond.

RTV does have its limitations though. When using this material, you will have to leave them. It starts to set-up within 15 minutes or so, so you have to assemble the parts without delay. In addition, when applying the material out of the tube, don't drop any grease into the engine. The stuff will harden and set and block the oil galleries, possibly causing oil to passage. Also, most tubes are not full-sized. Check the tube for all cautions.

CLEANERS

• See Figures 8 and 9

There are two types of cleaners on the market today: parts cleaners and hand cleaners. The parts cleaners are for the parts; the hand cleaners are for you. They are not interchangeable.

Fig. 8 That new ultra hand cleaners not only work well, but they smell pretty good too. Choose one with pump for added cleaning power.

Fig. 9 The use of hand lotion keeps your hands and keeps dirt and grease from sticking to your skin.
