These institutions are "specialized" branches of the state administration responsible for the areas of "Education" or "Culture" etc. The members of parliament have a special influence on the national budgetary management plan. Their functions are defined in the 1992 Law on the National Assembly and the National Council. The 1992 Law also stipulates that the representatives of the opposition in the National Assembly and the National Council should be appointed by the opposition organizations. Furthermore, the National Council and the National Assembly are authorized to elect members of the executive branch of the state administration. The government and the National Assembly have the right to dismiss the members of the executive branch of the state administration.

- The authors defend their strategy first by pointing out, according to their first main argument, that, contrary to the strategy, opponents of military intervention do not see the world as being
- really more or less the same as the opponents who are not convinced themselves and pragmatically recognize intervention as being useful (Kagan, 2002).
- The second point is that, by emphasizing the opponents' view of the world, the authors argue that it is unrealistic to claim that intervention is necessary for certain purposes.
- The authors also point out that, according to their own research, a strategy of either preventive intervention or humanitarian intervention will not be winning in the long run. The authors' conclusion is that the world is not really the same as the opponents see it.
- The authors suggest, nevertheless, that the authors believe that there are reasons why the world is not the same as the opponents see it. The authors suggest that the world is not the same as the opponents see it.
