

NYC DOE Framework for Teaching: Danielson Rubric

	INEFFECTIVE	DEVELOPING	EFFECTIVE	HIGHLY EFFECTIVE
1.1C The teacher displays knowledge of content and pedagogy	In planning and practice, the teacher makes use of content knowledge but seems to view content as static. The teacher displays little understanding of pedagogical knowledge important to students' learning of the content. The teacher displays little concern and interest in the ways of pedagogical approaches available to students' learning of the content.	The teacher is familiar with the important concepts in the discipline, but displays a lack of awareness of how these concepts relate to student learning. The teacher understands content as static and displays little understanding of pedagogical approaches available to students' learning of the content.	The teacher displays solid knowledge of the important concepts in the discipline and how these relate to student learning. The teacher understands content and understands of pedagogical approaches available to students' learning of the content. The teacher plans and practice reflect familiarity with a wide range of effective pedagogical approaches in the discipline and the ability to anticipate student misconceptions.	The teacher displays extensive knowledge of the important concepts in the discipline and how these relate to student learning and to pedagogical approaches. The teacher demonstrates wide understanding of pedagogical approaches and content placed under scrutiny the link to necessary cognitive structures that must exist in students' learning. The teacher plans and practice reflect familiarity with a wide range of effective pedagogical approaches in the discipline and the ability to anticipate student misconceptions.
1.2C The teacher understands instructional practices	Learning activities are poorly aligned with the instructional outcomes, do not follow a sequential progression, are not designed to engage students' interest, intellectual activity and have a monotone, low effectiveness, unvaryingly negative or unrelatable to the activities and offer little variety.	Some of the learning activities and tasks are aligned with instructional outcomes and represent meaningful cognitive challenge, but with no different student level of an effective instructional group partially appropriate activities, with some variety. The teacher or unit has a meaningful structure, but the progression of tasks is unvarying, with only minor variations in the effectiveness.	Most of the learning activities are aligned with the instructional outcomes and follow a sequential progression suitable to groups of students. The learning activities have some with some effectiveness, they represent significant cognitive challenge, with some differentiation for different groups of students and varied use of instructional groups.	The sequence of learning activities follows a coherent argument, is aligned to instructional goals, and is designed to engage students in high-level cognitive activity. There are appropriate differentiation for individual learners. Instructional groups are varied appropriately with some opportunity for students to learn.
2.1C Creating an environment of student support	Relationships between interactions, both between a teacher and students and among students, are generally negative, unproductive, or have no clear teacher and/or student learning goals, and if made good there is. Student interactions are characterized by negative, passive, or conflict. The teacher does not deal with all inappropriate behavior.	Relationships between interactions, both between a teacher and students and among students, are generally appropriate but may reflect occasional inappropriate, disruptive, or disruptive for students' support, influence, and development and there is. Student rarely demonstrates appropriate behavior. The teacher may begin to respond to inappropriate behavior with some results. The overall of the learning environment is neutral, unvarying neither positive nor conflict.	Relationships between interactions are friendly and the interactions are productive and support. Such learning environment is appropriate to the age, culture, and development characteristics of the students, with positive among students are generally positive and respectful, and students exhibit support for the teacher. The teacher manages successfully to be respectful to all students' learning. The overall of the learning environment is positive, respectful and harmonious, though students may be aware when teachers are not taking intentional role.	Classroom interactions between the teacher and students and among students are highly respectful, reflecting genuine warmth, caring, and sensitivity to students' individuality. Students exhibit respect for the teacher and contribute to high level of a healthy learning environment. The overall of the learning environment is positive and harmonious, with students' learning and development.
2.2C Managing student behavior	There appears to be inconsistent standards of conduct, or students' behavior. There is little or no focus on monitoring of students' learning and/or positive behavior and/or behavior in comparison and some partial of students' dignity.	Standards of conduct appear to have been established, but their implementation is inconsistent. The teacher takes, with some results, no consistent action in behavior of response to students' misbehavior.	Standards of conduct are generally appropriate. The teacher monitors student behavior against established standards of conduct. Teacher response to students' misbehavior is consistent, proportionate, and respectful to students and is effective.	Standards of conduct are consistently appropriate. Students take an active role in monitoring their own behavior and for their effective students appear to understand and act on it. Teacher monitoring of students' behavior is subtle and persistent. The teacher's response to student misbehavior is sensitive to individual student and/or supports students' dignity.
