

Argumentative - Junk Food

Should the sale of junk food in school cafeterias be banned? In more traditional years, parents had to prepare packed lunch for their kids when going to school. However, in present times, most parents are already incapable of doing such things. This is because they lack the luxury of time with the hectic schedules that they have. Parents tend to just give money to their children to purchase what they need. Given this kind of situation, students are exposed to a variety of options and they are given the freedom to pick whatever they want.

In terms of what they eat, students are tempted to choose the ones which happen to be unhealthy and low in essential nutrients like junk foods. For better or for worse, junk food has gone global; it is now available all over the world (Magee, 2007, para. 1). Schools must protect the freedom that the students have in choosing what they want to consume. Without any doubt, I firmly believe that the sale of junk foods in school cafeterias should be banned for several reasons. Foremost among my reasons is that junk food triggers obesity in kids and teens (Masand, 2011). Children nowadays are highly susceptible of becoming obese.

Even at a very young age, they are at risk of putting their life in danger. High blood pressure, heart problems, breathing problems and even type 2 diabetes are just some of the risk associated with obesity. Aside from these risks, obese children are most likely to experience emotional and psychological turmoil. Furthermore, children who are overweight are more stressed compared to children with normal weight. This is because they feel insecure and unhappy for being teased and criticized. They are even subject to disapproval from discussions of family, friends and remarks from other people.

Some people may object to this argument claiming that junk food dissociates with the rates of childhood obesity. A new study has found that kids who attend schools where junk foods are highly available do not gain more weight compared to those kids who attended schools where a particular type of food is not available. Jennifer Van Hook, a Professor of Sociology and Demography at Pennsylvania State University and lead author of the study, said that kids do not spend much time to eat at school (Goodwin, 2012, Para. 2). This suggests that targeting schools is just an ineffective strategy.

Well, granting that students still spend a small fraction of their time in schools is already a great opportunity to make a difference. Five years ago, a study was conducted which restricts school cafeterias in California from selling junk foods. As a result, a newly published report shows that California high school students consume on average nearly 160 calories fewer compared to their peers in other states (O'Connor, 2012). Cutting this amount of calories a day is significant enough; children and adolescents are
