Abstract

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine whether there were differences in the prevalence of risk factors for coronary artery disease between men who had been exposed to asbestos and those who had not. A case-control study was conducted among men aged 60 years or older who had been employed in asbestos-related occupations before age 60. The prevalence of smoking, hypertension, diabetes mellitus, hypercholesterolemia, and obesity was compared between cases and controls. The results showed that the prevalence of all five risk factors was significantly higher in the exposed group than in the control group. The findings suggest that exposure to asbestos may be associated with an increased prevalence of risk factors for coronary artery disease.
