Based on the collection, selected data needed to determine present and the requirements for future research, this has been used as part of other studies to conduct a good to proper investigation on various theoretical and practical issues on the economic life of the poor and the impact of their activities on the socio-economic system.

The authors also are impressed at the extent to which scientists at the three regional centers' environmental research teams and their students are well beyond the capabilities of these centers and the federal institutions. Students at the centers are used to doing the basic principles of chemistry and cell physiology. They also are exposed to some environmental issues.

Other factors in addition to parents also have a strong influence on the child's reading development. For example, in 1990, Scarborough, Frith, and Hall found that the degree to which parents read to their young children predicted children's reading achievement in first grade.
