The Men Stephen Leal Jackson, 2010 Submarine duty during World War II was one of the most statistically deadly physically demanding and emotionally challenging assignments in the U S Navy The boats had few crew comforts and war patrols typically thirty to sixty days in length were so exhausting that the submarine sailors often got a month of rest after each patrol What would motivate men to volunteer for this unmistakably difficult and dangerous job This is the question that The Men will answer using the oral histories of enlisted submarine veterans a collection of letters of one sailor who did not return and other primary sources These volunteers from diverse locales and backgrounds ignored the danger accepted the privations and exalted in the camaraderie Their excitement fear and humble heroism is captured in their own words the real story of the undersea war in the Pacific told by the men who fought it A veteran of the United States Navy Stephen Leal Jackson spent eight years in the submarine force serving on the USS Los Angeles SSN 688 and the USS Florida SSBN 728 Jackson s service included several Western Pacific cruises to the oceans lands and ports described in The Men A lifelong student of American history Jackson s ongoing research concentrates specifically on World Wars I and II Jackson received his Master of Arts in American History from Providence College and is currently in the Ph D program at Salve Regina University Jackson has served as the primary spokesperson for a major electrical utility on nuclear and environmental issues His unique perspective as a onetime navy enlisted submariner trained historian and skilled communicator allows Jackson to provide clear and easy access to the fascinating experiences of the men who fought the undersea battles during World War II

The Epidemiology of Smoking Among U.S. Navy Women Recruits Susan I. Woodruff, 1998 This study addressed several issues related to the course of smoking among young women entering the US Navy The smoking experience of women entering the Navy was described and their smoking prevalence was compared to civilians The effect of an involuntary 8 week smoking ban during recruit training on recruits smoking perceptions and intentions was examined

Three months after leaving recruit training baseline smokers were reassessed to determine the impact of the eight weeks of enforced cessation on smoking relapse. Finally, nonresponse to the 3 month assessment and its potential effect on validity of findings was investigated. About 5,500 women were surveyed over a 1 year period at entry to recruit training. Standardized comparisons showed the smoking rate among recruits was higher than civilians 38.7% versus 28.8% respectively, controlling for differences in age, race, and education. Age, education, and race/ethnicity were related to smoking prevalence at entry. As a result of the 8 week smoking ban, there was a 39% reduction in the percent of all women recruits who perceived themselves as smokers from entry to graduation from recruit training. Age, education, race/ethnicity, level of baseline smoking, and addiction and intentions to smoke were related to changes in perceptions of being a smoker or the maintenance of consistent positive perceptions of being a nonsmoker. Similarly, changes in intentions to smoke were associated with sociodemographic and baseline smoking variables. Those with any smoking experience at entry were surveyed 3 months after leaving recruit training to determine subsequent short term effects of the involuntary smoking ban. Response rate to the follow up survey was 39%. Reluctant respondents were not different from those responding promptly to the original survey, but nonrespondents as a group were less educated, had a higher prevalence of baseline smoking, and were more frequent smokers than respondents. Sixty-eight percent had relapsed at the follow up. Relapse rates varied by sociodemographic characteristics, entry and graduation smoking variables, entry to graduation changes in perceptions and intentions to smoke, and Navy factors. The type of smoker one was at entry to the Navy was an important predictor of relapse, with 89% of daily smokers smoking at the 3 month follow up. Results suggest that the 8 week involuntary ban on smoking was useful in bringing about changes in self-reported smoking status and in helping some individuals stay off cigarettes once they leave recruit training, although policy alone cannot be expected to be effective for all smokers. High relapse rates, particularly among heavier smokers, underscore the need for educational/motivational efforts during recruit training to help maintain the quit status achieved during those eight weeks.
