

What are the three types of a family studies?

1. Twinship studies comparing monozygotic twins (identical twins) and dizygotic twins (fraternal twins) that are reared together, which helps to assess genetic influences, and twins that are reared apart, which helps to assess environmental influences.

2. Adoption studies

Studies to determine the study of genetic influence is separated from environment.

Adoption studies studying schizophrenia have found that genetically transmitted forms of these symptoms has changed more than what is going on in the environment.

Adoption studies of schizophrenia have developed some disadvantages in terms of adoption and ethnic and cultural differences.

Adoption studies of schizophrenia and environment schizophrenia studies that U.S. studies suggest a much stronger genetic influence than in other countries.

Adoption studies of autism have a similar pattern. The first is "nature" (genetics) and the second is "nurture" (environment).

3. Family studies the influence of genetics is of a family is a family study. Family studies have found a strong genetic influence for schizophrenia that is different from previous studies. However, the study
