Between Hurricanes Jennifer Rane Hancock:

Between Hurricanes Jennifer Rane Hancock, 2015 Poetry Women's Studies Book of poems arising from the ephemeral sand islands of the Texas Gulf Coast and the wild child Australian outback where Hancock was raised by itinerant artists. From the poem September 1976 Calm the girls swayed their terrycloth hips between hurricanes and held the railings and crooned to the dolphins that all was safe. The poems hearken to a childhood of an almost mythological upbringing. From the milieu of that youth the poems branch out into the wide world with stops at the Svalbard Global Seed Vault in Norway, the HAARP antennae array in Gakona, Alaska, a view of Anne Sexton's checkbook in a museum, to the difficult times in New Orleans after Katrina. The book embodies the hard journey into the adult world where despite everything the poet comes to grips with being alive in the world. The last lines of the final poem: If this had been a test the air would be alive with sirens and intent the whooping cranes startled but resolute the promise of anything redolent with oleander.
