 Reflection* Randolph Feezell,2010-10-01 In paperback for the first time Randolph Feezell s Sport Play and Ethical Reflection immediately tackles two big questions about sport What is it and Why does it attract so many people Feezell argues that sports participation is best described as a form of human play and the attraction for participants and viewers alike derives from both its aesthetic richness and narrative structure He then claims that the way in which sports encourage serious competition in trivial pursuits is fundamentally absurd and therefore participation requires a state of irony in the participants where seriousness and playfulness are combined Feezell builds on these conclusions addressing important ethical issues arguing that sportsmanship should be seen as a kind of Aristotelian mean between the extremes of over and under investment in sport Chapters on cheating running up the score and character building stress sport as a rule governed tradition bound practice with standards of excellence and goods internal to the practice With clear writing and numerous illuminating examples Feezell demonstrates deep insight into both of his subjects The Psychology of Executive than liberal and individual centered rather than collectivist frame of reference These essays are self contained enough to be read out of order although I did line them up in the way that I think best presents my argument I hope what I offer here informs the debate in this country over the best route to take in educating our children I wrote this book with both general readers and professional educators in mind For general readers I hope what is here will provide them with a better understanding of how professional educators come at their work and thereby enable them to deal with school people more effectively and give them some things they can take into account when determining what ought to go on in their children s education or in schools generally For people in the profession who read this book teachers and administrators those in training to become teachers and so on I believe these writings will provide them with a clearer understanding of the predominant thinking in their field a good way to understand anything is to compare it with something that contrasts with it I would presume and hope that for some educators and educators to be this book will provide them with ideas they can use to guide their work Much of what follows is expressed in the first person I thought that if I brought myself into this book it would encourage readers to bring themselves into it I would like readers to see these writings as my half of a conversation I want them to respond critically to what I have written and extend it take it farther than I have been able to and I don t think they have to be active in the field of education to be able to do that I want readers to decide how if at all what I write changes the way they look at things and what they a
