By 1990, the trend in the chemical industry mirrored what American spent. Performance was the only, leading indicator for the good quality, low-cost, low-price products you find in that sector. My thinking and action model is that of quality to be weighed with cost, time, and the highest overall degree of service and strong client loyalty programs.

For a first-hand view, think back through the decade of the 1980s, reimagining the industry from within and externally toward and outward from the inside and outside the

It is important to remember that the 1990s financial crisis was not simply a by-product of the 1980s. The financial institutions were not naive or ignorant concerning international capital markets and their liquidity. Indeed, they were among the first to see the need for a global capital market and to begin to build one. The global capital market was not a new idea. It was an old idea that had been around for a long time. The global capital market was not a new idea. It was an old idea that had been around for a long time.
