Michael Sadler on the conditions of the textile factories), the testimony described the negative effects of the Industrial Revolution. Cooper states " We had one period of forty minutes in the sixteen hours. That was at noon. " This meant that Cooper, and other children working in the factories, receives little or no food at all. Lack Of nutrition can cause improper bone growths and health problems such as stunted growth (when a person does not grow or weigh as much as he/she should).

A factory workers diet usually consisted of high amounts of carbohydrates (carbohydrates gave the children energy to untile working for long periods of time, usually 14- 16 hours a day). Lack of sunlight caused depression, dust caused lung cancer, and long hours caused deformed growth abilities.

Also, many children were injured by the machines. Due to the long hours of labor, children usually had lack of concentration in which their body parts would get caught between the machines. According to an excerpt from William Cooper's testimony before the Sadler Committee in 1 832 and an excerpt from the testimony of Joseph Hebraic to the Sadler Committee (an investigation group led by Michael Sadler on the conditions of the textile stories), the testimony described the negative effects of the Industrial Revolution.

Textile factories were filled with children, running machines, and harsh labor conditions. Children had to work long hours (16- 18 hours) making 3-4 pence a day and received little nutrition in which it led to many health conditions such as lung disease, improper bone growth, and back problems (spines were bent rather than being up-straight).
