The Rock Cycle

Have you ever wondered how rocks are formed? It's all part of a process called the rock cycle. The rock cycle is like a big recycling system that constantly changes rocks from one form to another. Let's learn more about the rock cycle!

The rock cycle has three main types of rocks: igneous, sedimentary, and metamorphic. Igneous rocks are formed when molten rock, called magma, cools and hardens. This can happen deep underground or on the Earth's surface. Some examples of igneous rocks are granite and basalt.

Sedimentary rocks are formed from small pieces of rocks, minerals, and other materials that are pressed together over time. This can happen in rivers, lakes, or oceans. Some examples of sedimentary rocks are sandstone and limestone.

Metamorphic rocks are formed when other rocks are subjected to extreme heat and pressure. This can happen deep underground where tectonic plates collide or in volcanic areas. Some examples of metamorphic rocks are marble and slate.

The rock cycle starts with igneous rocks. These rocks can be weathered and eroded by wind, water, and ice. The small pieces of rock, called sediment, can then be transported and deposited in new locations. Over time, these sediments can be buried and compacted to form sedimentary rocks.

If these sedimentary rocks are subjected to heat and pressure, they can change into metamorphic rocks. Metamorphic rocks can also be weathered and eroded to form sediment that can then be turned into sedimentary rocks again. And the cycle continues!

The rock cycle is a never-ending process that helps shape the Earth's surface. It's amazing to think about how rocks can change form over millions of years. Next time you see a rock, think about where it might have come from and how it fits into the rock cycle. The Earth is always changing, and the rock cycle is just one way we can see that in action.
