

Intake and Assessment

Disclaimer: This video is designed to be a conversation starter on the topic of intake and assessment in a remote aged care context. The facilitator should make use of other resources to ensure the learner continues to develop their understanding on how people can access aged care support, the assessment process for your service type, and other subtopics identified in this video.

Care workers often become advocates of aged care services to their wider communities. As family members, friends, neighbours and others become aware of the person's role in the industry, care staff may be asked questions about accessing aged care help.

This video explores one of the ways that older people may access aged care services and the processes that are involved.

Direct-to-service referral

In this video, we see a potential care recipient (Delia) being referred to the aged care service by a nurse from the local health service. The referral could also come from the person's doctor or a hospital discharge planner.

Enid notes the referral request but advises the nurse that Delia must register with My Aged Care and be assessed and approved for services.

Organisations who have funding for the Commonwealth Home Support Programme (CHSP) or the National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Flexible Aged Care Program (NATSIFACP) may be able to put in place some interim services. For example, delivered meals, personal care, nursing care and essential transport until the person is assessed through My Aged Care for CHSP or a Home Care Package or, in the case of NATSIFACP, a health professional provides a report and recommendations.

- Talk about the different programs you have at your centre or service and the pathway people take to access your services.

When an organisation accepts a direct referral, they still need to conduct an intake assessment to ensure the services delivered are safe and effective for the person.

Lodging a referral to My Aged Care

Enid assists Delia in lodging her application for assessment with My Aged Care. Although some people can access the My Aged Care portal independently, others may need assistance from their families or other support organisations.

Aged Care Navigators can help guide people through the process of applying for aged care help. However, these may only be available in some remote communities. Sometimes, health care professionals or the aged care service will also help link people in, especially where this improves cultural safety.

- Talk about Aged Care Navigators who may be available in your area. How do people get in touch with them?
