1.1 The four qualities of a healthy relationship are, honesty with trust, respect, loyalty and forgiveness when one is at fault.

1.2 Two factors that contribute to a detrimental relationship are:

- Disrespect – if one disrespects their friends, family members or partners it can lead to a negative relationship because there would be constant fighting.
  - The person can say things that they don't really mean and break their parents trust
  - The other may feel low about themselves when getting disrespected and it can lead to a negative self-esteem, causing anxiety.
- Jealousy- This can be shown by constantly asking the other who they are communicating with, leading them to think there is no trust between them.
  - It can cause assumptions to be made and fights could start.
  - When a person is jealous, they lack confidence and this can lead to a couple limiting their independence which leads to one not being themselves and having the strength they once did.

1.3 In some cultures, parents chose who their child marries. An example of this is in India whereby Indian parents chose who their child marries because the caste system is very important along with the dowry. This shows the wealth of the family. It is negative because sometimes the couple don't love each other which makes relationships difficult to start.

- In some cultures, gender roles are believed in whereby the woman should stay at home and cook and clean the house while the men go to work. Its negative because friction could start
