DNA - The Double Helix

DNA, which is found in the nucleus of eukaryotic cells and the nucleoid region of prokaryotic cells, is essential for life because it stores and transmits genetic information. It is responsible for making an organism look like it's parents and for allowing an organism to keep them alive, and to allow instructions needed to create organisms, to keep them alive, and to allow them to reproduce. In the nucleus of our cells, DNA wraps around proteins, creating chromosomes. Segments of DNA within these chromosomes are called genes. Genes code for specific proteins in our bodies. All of our cells contain the same code for specific proteins in our bodies. This is because every cell in our body has the same code. Some cells will express different proteins than others. For example, muscle cells express different proteins than nerve cells.

DNA is sometimes referred to as a twisted ladder because if you were to unravel DNA, the bases would be in the middle of the molecule and the sugars and phosphates would be on the sides. Hydrogen bonds between the bases hold the two strands together. Within a DNA molecule, the bases always pair together in a specific way. Adenine always pairs with Thymine, Guanine pairs with Cytosine.

The two strands of DNA are antiparallel, which means they are parallel but in opposite directions. One strand will have the 5' (deoxyribose 5' prime) end on the left and the 3' end on the right, while the other strand will have the 3' end on the left and the 5' end on the right. The 5' end of DNA has a phosphate group attached to the third carbon in the deoxyribose molecule. The 3' end has a hydroxyl group attached to the third carbon in the opposite molecule.
