- ✓ Gel Electrophoresis is, "a technique which uses a thin block of jelly-like material (gel) to act as a sieve to separate molecules. Fragments of DNA or proteins are separated based on their size by applying an electrical field across the gel. The smaller molecules move more quickly than the larger molecules." Using this technique, different DNA and proteins are separated by size and easily compared to one another. In this lab you will virtually go through the techniques and perform an experiment.

Pre Lab Questions:

1. What is used to cut the DNA into fragments? _____
2. Where and how does it know where to cut? _____
