1. Distinguish between endocrine glands and exocrine glands.

Exocrine glands retain their connection to the epithelial surface, which may be external (for example, sweat and tear glands) or internal (for example, the pancreas and salivary glands), using a duct.

Endocrine glands: do not have ducts but are full of blood capillaries; secrete hormones directly into the blood, for example, thyroid, adrenal, and pituitary glands

2. Define or describe hormone, target cell, hypersecretion, and hyposecretion.

Hormone: A chemically active substance secreted by a group of cells to regulate the functions of other cell types.

Target cell: A cell that has specific receptors (binding sites) for a particular hormone.

Hypersecretion: excessive production of a hormone.

Hyposecretion: inadequate secretion of a hormone.

3. Explain the mechanism of action of nonsteroid hormones.

Hormone-receptor interaction (first messenger), Enzyme activation, Release of the second messenger, Effects on cellular function

4. Describe the mode of action of steroid hormones.

They move along the cytoplasm and into the nucleus where they bind to a receptor (lock-and-key model).

5. Describe and provide an example of a negative feedback mechanism involved in the regulation of hormone release.

An increase in the level of blood glucose stimulates the secretion of insulin by the pancreatic beta cells. Because insulin facilitates the uptake of glucose by cellular
