Abstract

Introduction Recurrent hiatal hernia (HH) is a significant challenge in surgical practice, with recurrence rates reported to range between 25% and 42%. This condition often requires redo surgeries, which are technically demanding and complex. While advancements in surgical techniques have improved outcomes, the optimal strategy for the surgical management of HH recurrence remains unclear. While mesh reinforcement is proposed to reduce recurrence, its use remains controversial due to potential complications. This systematic review and meta-analysis aim to evaluate whether redo-surgery for HH with cruroplasty using mesh reinforcement was superior to suture cruroplasty in terms of postoperative complications and mortality. To our knowledge, there is no existing review on the topic using a systematic approach.

Methods and procedures A comprehensive literature search of PubMed, Scopus, and Web of Science was conducted according to PRISMA 2020 guidelines. Studies evaluating postoperative outcomes of redo surgery for recurrent HH with and without mesh reinforcement were included. A random-based model was used in the meta-analysis to explore potential between-study heterogeneity. Odds ratios (OR) with 95% confidence intervals (CI) were calculated. The risk of bias was assessed with the Risk Of Bias In Non-randomized Studies - of Interventions (Version 2) ROBINS-I.

Results A total of 14 studies with 1011 patients were included. No statistically significant difference was observed in post-operative complications (OR = 0.58, 95% CI = 0.32–1.04, $p = 0.07$) or mortality (OR = 0.41, 95% CI = 0.08–1.98, $p = 0.27$) between mesh-reinforced and non-reinforced cruroplasty. However, the results suggest a numerical tendency toward lower rates in the mesh group, which did not reach statistical significance. The funnel plots were symmetrical, suggesting no significant publication bias. The overall quality of evidence was moderate, with considerable heterogeneity among studies.

Conclusion This review highlights the sheer lack of robust data on the benefit of mesh placement in HH repair and the significant heterogeneity in the available literature. Although mesh reinforcement shows a potential trend toward better outcomes, it does not achieve statistical significance in reducing complications or mortality. New prospective, RCTs are necessary to better evaluate the benefits and risks of mesh placement.

Introduction

The first documented case of hiatal hernia (HH) in the scientific literature in the United States dates back to 1853 [1]. Since then, an extensive number of reports, trials, and in-depth studies have been published on the subject. HH, while benign, can have widespread functional consequences that significantly impact patients' quality of life (QoL). Surgical correction remains the only curative treatment, but recurrence after surgery is a persistent issue, with radiological rates reported to range from 25 to 42% in symptomatic patients. Redo surgery for HH poses a significant challenge when it comes to surgical management, representing a complex clinical scenario characterized by the return of herniated abdominal contents through the esophageal hiatus following a previous surgical intervention [2–4].
