

History of Environmental Literature and Criticism

Environmental literature and criticism have evolved significantly over time, reflecting changing societal values and scientific understanding. The field encompasses a wide range of texts, from early nature writing to contemporary environmental justice narratives.

Key figures in the history of environmental literature include Henry David Thoreau, John Muir, and Rachel Carson. Their works have shaped the way we perceive and interact with the natural world. Modern environmental criticism often draws on these foundational texts to analyze contemporary environmental issues and the role of literature in environmental advocacy.
