

III. GETTING STARTED

What You Need: To use Apple Writer II you need the following (including Apple Writer II, an Apple II computer with a minimum of 40K of memory, one or more disk drives, and a video monitor).

As an option, you may want to install a "Super Display" 80 column display card (J & B Enterprises, Sunnyvale, California). This display card must be connected to Apple peripheral slot 1, for your display for information.

It is advisable to also purchase an additional monitor cable to allow easy switching between 80 column and 40 column operation. It is also recommended that the "Softkey Modification" be made. This modification permits the entry of upper case letters by using the shift key just like a typewriter. References to the "softkey modification" in this manual refer to this change. Ask your dealer to make this change for you.

For reference, you should have on hand your Apple II III Manual.

To use the printer program to print a document, you need an Apple compatible printer (and its interface card if appropriate).

You will also need to have on hand extra diskettes which have been initialized (this procedure is outlined in your Apple II III Manual and in this manual under the "F/D-I III Common Menu" section) for file storage so that you may save your documents and have "back-up" copies of your work to protect yourself against "accidents".

III. THE EDITOR MENU

(Setting Apple Writer "On and Running"). To operate Apple Writer II, place the II diskette containing Apple Writer in drive drive one and turn on the computer.

After you turn on the computer, you will see the message:

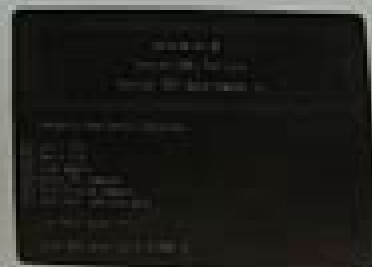

Press RETURN to begin:

NOTE: If you do not have an 80-column display card, you will first see the prompt:

Do you have lower case display (Y/N)?

Enter Y (Y = Yes) or N (N = No) as appropriate and press RETURN.

The next display that appears on your screen is called "The Editor Menu", and looks like this:
