Assessment Practices

Types of Assessments

- 1. Diagnostic: assesses students' knowledge and skills before instruction to identify strengths and needs, as well as to inform instruction and to provide targeted support.
- 2. Formative: designed to monitor students' learning progress and to provide feedback during the learning process (Baker, 2009).
- 3. Summative: measures students' learning outcomes at the end of a unit, course, or program, providing data to evaluate the effectiveness of instruction and to inform future instruction (Baker, 2009).

"Language is the great bridge of a nation. It builds good culture, it's a bridge between hearts and nations. They are giving it."

—Rita Mae Brown

Alignment of Assessment

Assessment alignment refers to the degree to which the assessment measures the same skills and knowledge that are taught in the curriculum. It is a critical component of ensuring that assessments are valid and reliable measures of student learning. There are three main types of alignment: content alignment, construct alignment, and criterion alignment. Content alignment refers to the degree to which the assessment measures the same content as the curriculum. Construct alignment refers to the degree to which the assessment measures the same skills and knowledge as the curriculum. Criterion alignment refers to the degree to which the assessment measures the same standards as the curriculum.
