

SUB-TEAMS

Within these overall project teams, the Architect may also be part of the following sub-teams:

Architect / Architect

Two complementary firms join together to work on a specific project. This is often called a "joint venture" and one of the Architects is the Prime Consultant to the Owner. This often happens when an Architect with a special expertise partners with a local firm. The local firm might stamp the drawings or prepare all the Contract Documents. Which firm does what is clearly defined (it has to be for legal reasons). Usually one is the "Design Architect," and the one stamping the drawings is the "Architect of Record."

Architect / Consultant

On virtually every project, the Architect works with Engineers and Consultants to complete the project. Some large firms do have their own in-house engineer teams, but this is not typically the case. Architects usually hire Consultants to perform the basic services for the project, including structural, mechanical, electrical, plumbing, civil, landscape, fire protection, or interior design services. Specialty Consultants have become common on larger projects, providing services for code compliance, cost estimating, audio visual, acoustics, energy modeling and much more.
