

Once you, or your Bang & Olufsen dealer, have assembled the loudspeakers, they are ready for connection to your Audio or Video system and to the mains.

The socket panel is located at the bottom of the BeoLab 6000. Use the illustrations on these pages and the graphics printed on the bottom plate for reference.

Connection to Bang & Olufsen products

Connect the BeoLab 6000 to the Beomaster/Beovision using the enclosed 8-pin Power Link cable. Plug one end into one of the Power Link sockets on the socket panel of the BeoLab 6000 and the other end into either of the two Power Link sockets on the Beomaster/Beovision (please refer to your setting-up guide for the Beomaster/Beovision).

Once you have connected the loudspeakers to the Beomaster/Beovision, the switch marked L • R • LINE must be set to either L or R:

In order to avoid cables running from both loudspeakers to your Beomaster/Beovision, you may loop the signals through, using the second Power Link socket, as illustrated. If you wish, you can, of course, also connect one loudspeaker to each of the Power Link sockets on the Beomaster/Beovision.

You can connect more than one pair (as many as ten pairs, in fact) of BeoLab 6000 loudspeakers to your system. You just have to run a Power Link cable from speaker to speaker. Remember though, to set the L • R • LINE switch to the proper position for the left- and right-hand speakers, respectively
