

FIG. 4

Cleaning

The grain and chaff come off the end of the main grain pan and are subjected to a continuous flow of air from the fanning mill, 10. The air flow covers the whole shaker shoe area and has sufficient force to overcome the weight of the chaff, but not the weight of the grain. The speed of the fan and the direction of the air are both adjustable. The direction being adjusted by deflectors, 11.

The grain and chaff move onto, and are conveyed across, the top sieve, 13.

The front section of this sieve is located directly above the clean grain auger, 12, and this section of the sieve is set so only grain can pass through with the fanning mill speed and deflectors being set to ensure no chaff falls into the clean grain auger.

Grain and chaff pass over the top sieve, 13, the middle sieve, 14, and onto the lower sieve, 15, in a cascade effect with the grain passing through the sieves into the clean grain auger, 12, and the chaff being blown out the back of the Combine. Unthreshed heads ride over the sieves to the rear section of the lower sieve, 15, which is set wide enough to allow the unthreshed heads to pass through and fall into the returns auger, 16.

Returns

Unthreshed heads falling into the returns auger are conveyed to the returns elevator and into the rethreshing unit.

The rethreshing unit is virtually a smaller cylinder and concave arrangement which rethreshes the returns and distributes the grain and chaff, through a hole in the side of the Combine, onto the pan-under-walkers, 9, where it is conveyed forward to the main grain pan, 5, to go through the cleaning process again.
