first comprehensive account of the tsarist army's relationship to Muslim soldiers in late imperial Russia. When Russia mobilized her army in the summer of 1914, more than half a million of the soldiers recruited for the front were Muslims from the Volga-Ural region that is present-day Tatarstan and Bashkortostan. They were the only ones among the millions of Muslim subjects of the tsar who were recruited into the regular army despite the fact that universal liability to military service had been introduced in the Russian Empire in 1874. However, in practice, special regulations had been adopted for the Crimean Tatars while the Muslim subjects of Central Asia and the Caucasus remained exempted, revealing the limited ability of the imperial state to extend the Great Reforms under Alexander II to its colonial peripheries. The book highlights the empire's policies of accommodating the religious needs of Muslim soldiers in the army but argues that this should be understood as a form of colonial accommodation and not as an embrace of tolerance as has been done before. By not only reconstructing the perspectives of military and bureaucratic elites and the Muslim intelligentsia but also considering accounts written by Muslim soldiers, this book includes the voices of the colonized whose stories are still too often ignored in the historiography of the Russian Empire. This book is a valuable contribution to three much-debated fields of imperial and colonial history: the accommodation of religious and ethnic diversity; the impact of the state's modernization projects; and the perception of imperial institutions by non-Russian subjects. It will be of interest to researchers in European History, Modern History, Military and Naval History, and Central Asian, Russian, and Eastern European Studies.

Shean,2010-08-23 This new study argues that the religious attitude of the Roman army was a crucial factor in the Christianization of the Roman world Specifically by the end of the third century there was a significant Christian presence within the army which was ready to act in the interests of the faith Conditions at this time were thus ripe for the coming to power of a Christian emperor when Constantine converted to Christianity he could rely upon the enthusiastic support of his Christian soldiers Constantine strengthened his Christian base by initiating policies which accelerated the Christianization of the army The continuation of these policies by Christian Roman emperors eventually allowed them to use the military as a vehicle for the suppression of paganism and heretical Christian sects
