Kyprianou,2023-06-23 The Church is commonly viewed as an earthly institution and is much less frequently recognized as a spiritual and heavenly reality called by God to make disciples of all nations Matt 28 19 This structured and integrated work offers a vision of a Christian Orthodox political thought in which the Church is neither sidelined as having no relevance to this present life nor dominated by temporal questions or popular movements at the expense of its eternal salvific mission The author grounds the mission of the Church in the present world both on an understanding of God as Trinity and in her mission to baptize diverse cultures To do this effectively the Church must recognize and adapt to local and contemporary political and social trends and patterns It must exemplify the Gospel as a way of communal and social life not allowing itself to be reduced to an impersonal ideology manifested within the sphere of imagination opinions or a private individualistic existence Drawing upon this philosophy the author proposes a way for believers to understand questions of both domestic politics and international relations with a view to bringing the world into the Kingdom of God He suggests specific steps that could be taken to heal and strengthen inter Orthodox relations addressing in particular the canonical challenges of the Orthodox diaspora and tensions between the Greek and Slavic components of the Church He addresses specifically the conflict between the majority Orthodox nations of Russia and Ukraine Whilst his specific proposals will by no means enjoy universal acceptance they can serve as a springboard for further dialogue as the Orthodox world seeks to apply these principles in all nations whatever their current political circumstances may be Factors Influencing the Biological Fate and Persistence of
