

Unit 19

Section one – finding work as a script writer

There are plenty of jobs in the film industry such as:

- Commissioning editors – Researches what genre of films/shows are popular and task writers to make a product similar to “what’s in” at the moment.
- Producers – Producers fund projects and have control over the ethical respectabilities of the product.
- Directors – Creates the product with guidelines from producer; he’ll follow the script to make the product the producer and script writers wanted.
- Script editors – script editors make sure the script is suitable and
- Agents – People who network and find people jobs which suit them
- Writers – people who write scripts for their producers

There are different commissioning bodies you could get your film produced by.

Corporations are big productions houses such as Disney, fox, universal and paramount which may be good for a script writer to get into. This is because big production corporations usually won’t use a writer just once (unless the scripts flopped) so one breakthrough in a corporation produced film could lead to a successful career. However, scripts for these production houses will usually have to be conventional in genre; genres that are popular at the time. If you are an independent director who doesn’t want to make a make big blockbusters with big companies you could approach an independent production company. Production houses which are outside the Hollywood circle that usually make lower budget movies; independent production companies. There are other Organisations which help writers like the BFI and the BBC writers room. Competitions like filmfreeway is a yearly writing competition to help writers in the UK gain status.

Section two – working as a writer, demands and requirements

One thing you must do as a writer is professionally present your script in the correct format: using master scene script for film, branching script for video games and for radio scripts there is more of an emphasis on the sound effects and the punctuation/emphasis on certain words. If you don’t producers will throw your script out without even looking at it.

To get jobs in the industry having agent representation can be a huge help; this is someone whose job it is to network and if they know that there is a studio wanting a comedy movie and knows of a writer who does comedy scripts they will connect them. Some production houses won’t even look at a script which hasn’t been given by an agent.

Another thing it’s important to do as a writer communication; know what the producers want. Don’t write a script which goes against what your producers wanted.

One thing that is vital as a writer is time management. Making sure you have time to finish the script. This will differ for different jobs though. Soap operas usually are written a week before they air so the script writer must plan to do long hours. Some writers will write a script before it’s been picked up then hand it to an agent to show to producers, in that case they can write it in their own time.

The royalties the writer receives are from the sales of whatever product they wrote for; the writers get a portion of the royalties but the other portions go to the agent and producers.
