

Best for writers who spent all of their money on new Apple stuff: Pages

Mac: Free (for Macs bought on or after October 1, 2013)

(<https://itunes.apple.com/us/app/pages/id409201541?mt=12>)

iOS: Free (for devices bought on or after September 1, 2013)

(<https://itunes.apple.com/us/app/pages/id381309726?mt=8>)

If you're looking for a completely free way to write and edit on whatever Apple device happens to be at your disposal (and it's been purchased within the past year and a half), you won't find an app anywhere that beats Pages. Apple took its iWork suite in a new direction with its iOS 7 redesign, removing many of its professional features along with the price of admission. But even without things like mail merging, linked text boxes and mailing labels, Pages is a fine tool for writers looking to quickly get to work.

No matter which platform you're using, there's a clear focus on simplicity, with a sparse interface and a well-stocked library of templates. There's no Markdown support, but headers, footers and margins are all adjustable, and rich-text support maintains a desktop-class uniformity across all of your devices.

But writers working in a standard template will be pleased with Pages' responsive layout and exporting options, which includes .doc as well as ePub and PDF. Documents are neatly formatted for each screen, and there's even a web component that lets you work on Windows PCs and collaborate with up to 100 other writers. And if you work alone, you can still utilize Pages' excellent annotations by inserting comments, monitoring changes and highlighting parts you need to work on later.

Pages has taken its lumps over the years—and it's probably not worth the $29.99 price Apple charges for older devices—but you'll be hard-pressed to find a free writing app with more features in either the Mac or iOS app stores, let alone both.
