

3, 2, 1... Takeoff!

- For an airplane to take off, thrust and lift must be greater than drag and gravity.
- To lower a plane and allow it to land, lift and thrust must be decreased until drag and gravity become greater.
- If the plane is headed into the wind, the plane will often be late landing because the force of drag is stronger than expected.
- A plane can also arrive early if the wind is pushing it from behind.
- In this case, the force of thrust is helping the plane move forward faster.
- If all four forces are in balance, an aircraft can hover in place.
