Abstract The purpose of this study was to examine the effects of a 6-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life (HRQL) of older adults. A total of 70 participants were randomly assigned to either a control group or an exercise group. The exercise group performed a combination of aerobic and resistance exercises three times per week. The control group did not participate in any structured exercise program. Pre- and post-test measurements were taken at baseline and after 6 weeks. Results showed significant improvements in cardiovascular fitness, muscle strength, and HRQL scores in the exercise group compared to the control group. These findings suggest that a 6-week exercise program can effectively improve physical fitness and HRQL in older adults.
