Directions: Read each selection. Then, compare and contrast the passages in the Venn Diagram below.

Beautiful Butterflies

Predators, like insects and birds, eat butterflies.

Butterflies have ways to protect themselves from predators. Butterflies can camouflage themselves into their surroundings. Some butterflies taste bad or are poisonous. If a predator eats a butterfly like this, it can cause them to throw up. If a predator has eaten a poisonous or bad tasting butterfly before, it will avoid eating butterflies that look the same in the future.

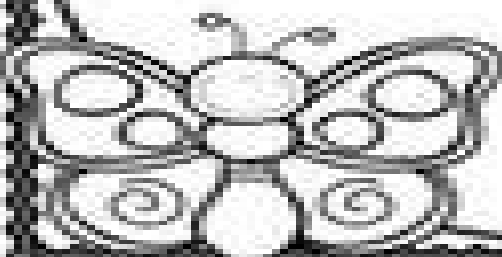

Marvelous Moths

Moths have many predators. Wsops are one of those predators. They lay their eggs on the moth caterpillars, and the baby wsops eat the caterpillars. Other animals eat adult moths. Those include spiders, birds, and bats.

Moths protect themselves by flying at night. Moths are also able to camouflage themselves using their color. They have spots on their wings that look similar to eyes. This might scare away a predator. Some moth caterpillars taste bad or are poisonous. This will stop a predator from trying to eat a caterpillar moth in the future.
