Camouflage in Animals

Many animals use camouflage to help them survive. Camouflage is the ability of an animal to blend in with its surroundings. Some animals change their colors to match their surroundings. For example, a chameleon can change its color to match the leaves it is sitting on. This helps it stay hidden from predators. Camouflage is also used by some animals to help them find food. For example, a fox's fur is white in the winter and brown in the summer. This helps it blend in with the snow or the ground. Camouflage is a very important survival skill for many animals.

Adaptation in Animals

Animals have many adaptations that help them survive. Adaptations are changes in an animal's body or behavior that help it survive in its environment. For example, a polar bear has a thick layer of fat and a white coat to help it survive in the cold Arctic. Camouflage is one type of adaptation that animals use to survive. It helps them hide from predators and find food. Adaptations are very important for animals to survive in their environment.
