

Compound Sentences

In a previous lesson, we learned about simple sentences. We learned that they are independent clauses. That is, they contain subjects and verbs and express complete ideas. Now, let’s focus our attention on compound sentences. The word “compound” means being composed of two or more things, so a compound sentence is composed of two or more simple sentences.

Let’s look at an example.

Example	Explanation
We were late.	simple sentence: being late is the complete thought
Our friends left without us.	simple sentence: leaving without us is the complete thought
We were late, so our friends left without us.	compound sentence: both complete thoughts

In this case, the two complete thoughts, or simple sentences, were joined together by “so”, which is a coordinating conjunction. There are seven coordinating conjunctions in English: for, and, nor, but, or, yet and so. An easy way not to forget them is to remember that combining the first letter of each spells fanboys.

Be careful. Coordinating conjunctions show that the things being joined are equal. For example, they can be used to join two subjects, two verbs or two phrases. It’s only when they join two or more

Example	Explanation
Heads and tails both	simple sentence – subject – heads, verb – resulted
He got married and	simple sentence – subject – he, verb – got
Heads and tails both got married	simple sentence – subject – heads, verb – resulted got

In the above example, the coordinating conjunction “and” joins two verbs, but the subject is the same. The result is a simple sentence with one subject and two verbs. Here are two more examples.

Example	Explanation

Where Are the Emotions in Words and the Words in Emotions? Cornelia Herbert, Thomas Ethofer, Andreas J. Fallgatter, Peter Walla, Georg Northoff, 2018-09-28 Language has long been considered independent from emotions In the last few years however research has accumulated empirical evidence against this theoretical belief of a purely cognitive based foundation of language In particular through research on emotional word processing it has been shown that processing of emotional words activates emotional brain structures elicits emotional facial expressions and modulates action tendencies of approach and avoidance probably in a similar manner as processing of non verbal emotional stimuli does In addition it has been shown that emotional content is already processed in the visual cortex in a facilitated manner which suggests that processing of emotional language content is able to circumvent in depth semantic analysis Yet this is only one side of the coin Very recent research putting words into context suggests that language may also construe emotions and that by studying word processing one can provide a window to one's own feelings All in all the empirical observations support the thesis of a close relationship between language and emotions at the level of word meaning as a specific evolutionary achievement of the human species As such this relationship seems to be different from the one between emotions and speech where emotional meaning is conveyed by nonverbal features of the voice But what does this relationship between written words and emotions theoretically imply for the processing of emotional information The present Research Topic and its related articles aim to provide answers to this question This book comprises several experimental studies investigating the brain structures and the time course of emotional word processing Included are studies examining the affective core dimensions underlying affective word processing and studies that show how these basic affective dimensions influence word processing in general as well as the interaction between words feelings and expressive behavior In addition new impetus comes from studies that on the one hand investigate how task sublexical and intrapersonal factors influence emotional word processing and on the other hand extend emotional word processing to the domains of social context and self related processing Finally future perspectives are outlined including research on emotion and language acquisition culture and multilingualism In summary this textbook offers scientists from different disciplines insight into the neurophysiological behavioral and subjective mechanisms underlying emotion and language interactions It gives new impulses to existing theories on the embodiment of language and emotion and provides new ways of looking at emotion cognition interactions Carr V.
