

Supervised and Unsupervised Learning

Supervised learning is a type of machine learning where the model is trained on a dataset with known labels and the goal is to predict the labels for new, unseen data.

Unsupervised learning is a type of machine learning where the model is trained on a dataset without known labels and the goal is to find patterns or structure in the data.

Examples:

1. Supervised learning: Predicting house prices based on features like size, location, and number of bedrooms.
2. Unsupervised learning: Finding clusters of similar items in a large dataset.

Supervised learning is used for tasks where the goal is to predict a specific output (e.g., classifying emails as spam or not spam). Unsupervised learning is used for tasks where the goal is to discover hidden patterns or relationships in the data (e.g., finding clusters of similar customers).

Supervised learning methods include:

1. Linear regression: A simple model that assumes a linear relationship between the input features and the output.
2. Logistic regression: A model used for binary classification tasks.
3. Decision trees: A model that splits the data into subsets based on feature values and makes predictions based on the resulting subsets.
4. Support vector machines: A model that finds the hyperplane that best separates the data into two classes.
5. Neural networks: A complex model that consists of multiple layers of nodes, each of which performs a simple operation.

Unsupervised learning methods include:

1. K-means clustering: A method for partitioning a dataset into K clusters.
2. Hierarchical clustering: A method for building a hierarchy of clusters.
3. Principal component analysis (PCA): A technique for reducing the dimensionality of a dataset.
4. Association rule learning: A method for finding interesting relationships between variables in a dataset.
5. Outlier detection: A method for identifying data points that are significantly different from the rest of the data.

Supervised learning methods are used for tasks where the goal is to predict a specific output (e.g., classifying emails as spam or not spam). Unsupervised learning methods are used for tasks where the goal is to discover hidden patterns or relationships in the data (e.g., finding clusters of similar customers).

Figure 10.1: A diagram illustrating the difference between supervised and unsupervised learning. Supervised learning involves training a model on a dataset with known labels, while unsupervised learning involves training a model on a dataset without known labels.

Supervised learning methods are used for tasks where the goal is to predict a specific output (e.g., classifying emails as spam or not spam). Unsupervised learning methods are used for tasks where the goal is to discover hidden patterns or relationships in the data (e.g., finding clusters of similar customers).

Figure 10.2: A diagram illustrating the difference between supervised and unsupervised learning. Supervised learning involves training a model on a dataset with known labels, while unsupervised learning involves training a model on a dataset without known labels.

Supervised learning methods are used for tasks where the goal is to predict a specific output (e.g., classifying emails as spam or not spam). Unsupervised learning methods are used for tasks where the goal is to discover hidden patterns or relationships in the data (e.g., finding clusters of similar customers).

Supervised learning: A type of machine learning where the model is trained on a dataset with known labels and the goal is to predict the labels for new, unseen data. Examples include linear regression, logistic regression, decision trees, support vector machines, and neural networks.
