Constructing and analyzing pedigrees from information and family history data. Pedigrees are a graphical representation of genetic relationships between individuals in a family across several generations. Pedigrees are constructed by genetic counselors, researchers, and other geneticists. Pedigrees are used to identify patterns of inheritance, to estimate the risk of disease, and to provide information about the health of individuals. Pedigrees are also used to identify the inheritance of specific traits. The following symbols are used in pedigrees:

- Affected individuals represent consanguinity
- Affected individuals represent individuals in other generations (not left to right)
- Affected individuals are consanguinity

timelines arranged as circles For each mentor a brief account is given of that person's work and relation to the subject of the pedigree

Genetic Effects on Environmental Vulnerability to Disease Sir Michael J. Rutter, 2008-09-15 Much research has attempted to show direct linear relations between genes and disorder However scientists have been discouraged by inconsistent findings based on this simple gene phenotype approach The alternative approach is to incorporate information about the environment A gene environment interaction approach assumes that environmental pathogens cause disorder whereas genes influence susceptibility to environmental pathogens This book brings together contributions from experts from multiple disciplines who discuss How epidemiological cohort studies can better integrate physiological mechanistic measures How best to characterise subjects vulnerability versus resilience by moving beyond single genetic polymorphisms How gene hunters can benefit from recruiting samples selected for known exposures How environmental pathogens can be used as tools for gene hunting How to deal with potential spurious statistical interactions and How genes can help explain fundamental demographic properties of disorders e g sex distribution age effects Making War, Making Women Melissa A. McEuen, 2011-02-15 Drawing on war propaganda popular advertising voluminous government records and hundreds of letters and other accounts written by women in the 1940s Melissa A McEuen examines how extensively women s bodies and minds became battlegrounds in the U S fight for victory in World War II Women were led to believe that the nation s success depended on their efforts not just on factory floors but at their dressing tables bathroom sinks and laundry rooms They were to fill their arsenals with lipstick nail polish creams and cleansers in their battles to meet the standards of ideal womanhood touted in magazines newspapers billboards posters pamphlets and in the rapidly expanding pinup genre Scrutinized and sexualized in new ways women understood that their faces clothes and comportment would indicate how seriously they took their responsibilities as citizens McEuen also shows that the wartime rhetoric of freedom democracy and postwar opportunity coexisted uneasily with the realities of a racially stratified society The context of war created and reinforced whiteness and McEuen explores how African Americans grappled with whiteness as representing the true American identity Using perspectives of cultural studies and feminist theory Making War Making Women offers a broad look at how women on the American home front grappled with a political culture that used their bodies in service of the war effort The Human Pedigree Anthony Smith, 1975
