Prologue

Kolkata-2007

"Where the heck are you?" screamed Sid as soon as I accepted his call.

"What happened?" I retorted keeping the coffee mug on the table. I had never noticed Sid scream like that.

"There is great violence on the streets. The protest march developed into a riot. The rioters have burnt vehicles at Park Circus connector," Sid replied agitatedly.

"I am at the adjoining street but could not spot any commotion," I replied instantly.

"Pinaki's agency is in that area. Call him and ask him the address. Do not forget to inform me once you reach safely," Sid said.

Siddhant Bali aka Sid handled the eastern region for retail loan products and happened to be my manager. Pinaki was my colleague during my stint with the International Bank of Netherlands at Kolkata. He was worried about my safety when he could not contact me at my work station. A protest march had been called by Islamic leaders against the decision made by the West Bengal Government to grant asylum to Taslima Nasrin, the exiled author, columnist and human rights activist of Bangladesh who was deported due to her hostile remarks about Islam. All the other states of India did not sanction her entry keeping in view the sentiments of the minority community and the likely hullabaloo to the country's social and political harmony.

It took me no time to locate Pinaki's phone number in the phonebook and dial it.

"Where are you?" I asked in apprehension as soon as Pinaki answered my call.

"I am in the Beckbagan agency," Pinaki replied worriedly.

"Is there some violence in the area?" I asked with angst.

"What happened?" Pinaki asked instantaneously.

"Sid informed of severe commotion in the city. Please collect some information and call me. I am also at Park Circus and he has directed me to contact you and reach the Beckbagan agency as soon as possible," I said rapidly, with bated breath.
