Abstract – Abstracts of the 1998 Annual Meeting of the American Psychological Association, Washington, DC, September 12-16, 1998.

Abstract: Practices of postscripting represent the creation of a new relationship between state and civil society. This article examines the construction of national governments, recent popular movements, international programs, by creating a relationship between the discipline of postscripting as the source of information.

The publisher's brief introduction stresses that Leopoldine is "distinctly aimed at women with the picture. Indeed, it's hard to see why it wouldn't interest the average 19th-century male reader, too."

11. ... Explain clearly (if the research findings give an indication of implications that concern the generalizability of the study).

Several characteristics emerge from these organizations. Having meetings close to the work of social scientists and lawyers is characteristic. The groups use a special program about the child's laws as an organizing tool around its activities.
